MERRYMURDER COMPONENTS

The components that make up a merrymurder game vary depending on which game you buy. However the following list will give you a good idea of what to expect.

Invitations

To be sent to your guests. The front page of the invitation features a summary of the crime and the characters involved. It also has space for you to insert details about the time, date and location of the party. There will then be full background details about the crime, which could be in the form of a newspaper or police report. And there may also be a map showing the location of the crime. The final page of the invitation will contain details about the character your guest is invited to play

Chief Investigator Booklet

The host of the party will normally play the Chief Investigator. This booklet contains the directions for running the party along with end of round summaries and the dramatic denouement speech with which the Chief Investigator will unmask the killer(s).

Suspect Character Booklets

These booklets contain the responses that the main suspects need to reply to investigator questions during each round. The suspects may also have questions of their own to ask and actions to perform. It is also in this booklet that, at some point in the game, those responsible for the killing will find out that they "dunit"!

Investigator Questions

Most merrymurder feature an Investigation Panel who assist the Chief Investigator to investigate the crime. In each round of the game they will be given a set of questions with which to challenge the suspects.

Clues

All merrymurder games have clues. These may either be clue documents or clue objects. They will be discovered throughout the game and displayed on a clue table so that all players may inspect them. Each mysterious clue, if interpreted correctly, will help throw light on the motives and relationships of the suspect characters.

Mystery Witnesses

In some merrymurders members of the Investigation Panel will temporarily take up another identity during the game to become a "mystery witness". Questioned by the Chief Investigator, these characters turn up at key moments to offer unexpected and, usually for a suspect, unwelcome evidence.

Scripts

Some of the merrymurder games have scripts for the characters to act out. For instance in "Slaughter at the Circus", the group will act out the events of the after show debriefing held on the night before Jacques' body was found. In "The Pungent Pumpkin Poisoner", two of the suspects, unbeknownst to the rest of the group, will suddenly stand up in the restaurant and have a blazing row.

Confession

When the killer has been unmasked, he or she will read a confession. This will explain fully how they committed the crime, and what exactly their motivations and thoughts were that led to them committing the crime.

MERRYMURDER STAGES

Again, each merrymurder game is unique, but generally the following stages will be involved in a game.

Pre-Party

Which involves sending out the invitations and arranging the room on the day of the party

Opening Speech

Each merrymurder has an opening speech which is made by the Chief Investigator. It is designed to explain what will happen and put novice players, who may be a little nervous, at their ease.

Introductions

The Chief Investigator and suspects will introduce themselves to the group.

Investigation

The investigation will take place over 3 to 4 rounds, and during these rounds anything can happen!

Members of the Investigation Panel will each have been given questions with which to challenge the suspects. In their Character Booklets, the suspects will have been given responses to these challenges. They may also have challenges themselves. And, as there is always plenty of love, hate, greed, passion and jealousy among the suspects, their interactions can get pretty animated!

Clue Objects and Clue Documents will be discovered, leading to further revelations and acrimony. And in some games Mystery Witnesses will suddenly come forward. These characters usually offer damaging evidence that will compromise individual suspects and make them sweat.

Characters will also have actions to perform and, in some games, scripts will be acted out. The beauty of these is that only some characters will know about them, so they will catch all the others off guard! Particularly the innocent player who unwittingly utters the cue! Unpredictability and surprise are two of the key elements in a merrymurder!

At the end of each round the Chief Investigator will provide a summary, as to what has been learnt. As there is always plenty going on in a merrymurder, these summaries are helpful in keeping everybody informed of the skullduggery that is afoot.

And at the end of the final round, the Chief Investigator will announce that they have heard enough evidence to decide who the guilty party is.

Protestations of Innocence

All suspects have a Protestation of Innocence at the back of their character booklet. They will use this to make a final plea to the Investigation Panel, trying to convince them of their innocence.

Accusations

All players now have to declare who they think committed the murder and why. The actual killer or killers will have to dream up a convincing accusation against an innocent suspect.

Denouement

With the aid of the clues on the clue table, it is now time for the Chief Investigator to give their dramatic denouement speech and unmask the killer!

Confession

The murderer will now open the confession envelope and reveal exactly what motivations made it imperative for them to remove the victim.

Take a Bow

And finally all players are invited to give themselves a big round of applause for their efforts!

PURCHASING A GAME

When you purchase a merrymurder, you will be sent a link to a location on the merrymurder website. From this location you will be able to download all the files necessary to make up the components for your merrymurder game. For instance if you were to purchase the email version of "The Wake for Humpty Dumpty", you would receive:

- An Instructions File
- A Character Invitations File
- An Investigators Invitations File
- A Character Booklets File
- A Clues, Questions Plus File

All the files are PDF files. This means that you will need Adobe Reader installed on your computer to read them. Most computers already have this software installed at the factory. However if not, Adobe Reader is available to download for free from The Adobe Website. Links to this site can be found on the merrymurder website.

You will also be able to download an optional Envelopes File. This file can be used to print off decorative envelopes in which your clues, mystery witness statements, murderer's confession etc can be placed.

Finally for those of you who wish to email your invitations, you will be given access to individual PDF invitations for each character. This means you can email your guest with the time, date and location of the party, and attach a specific invitation for the character that you wish them to play.

All games currently cost £19.95. The link to download your files will usually be emailed to you within 24 hours of you placing your order.

PAYING FOR YOUR GAME

All merrymurders can be purchased on line using a credit or debit card. Payments are processed through the PayPal system, meaning that merrymurder.com never get to see your card details.

WHO YOU ARE DEALING WITH

And finally a bit about me so you know who you're dealing with! My name is Tim Morrell and the merrymurder website is my baby! I have always been interested in murder mysteries. I think it is a result of having a mother who had the entire Agatha Christie collection and two older sisters who were always forcing me to play cluedo!

I have been writing games for over ten years now. The initial motivation was that the shop bought ones were just too dull and predictable! And writing my own games allowed me to put in the types of characters I'd like to play, and to have good strong meaty plots! You will find that merrymurders do not only contain the seven deadly sins, but several new ones join them as well! And the other thing I insist on is that the solution and storyline have to be satisfying. All too often in murder mystery games you find extraneous characters who have obviously been "bolted on", and insipid story lines that have precious little to do with the murder. I make sure that all my characters play an essential part in the game and that the solution, when it arrives, is as satisfying as it is surprising.

There are also plenty of laughs in a merrymurder. By the end of the night you will certainly know your fellow players a whole lot better than you did at the start! And you will have noticed that all the games have an adult rating. The higher that is the more raunchy they get! But there is nothing that should offend any broadminded adult ;-)

Many thanks for perusing this brochure. I hope it persuades you to make your next party a punch-packed merrymurder! If you have as much fun playing them as I have writing them, then you are guaranteed a riotous, rollicking night!

With very best wishes,

Tim Morrell
